A Long Way to Go:

The Bush Administration and 2004 SBA Lending by the Nation's Largest SBA Lenders

Largest SBA lenders are defined in this report as those financial institutions with over $50 billion in total assets and made over 200 SBA loans overall in fiscal year 2004.

“Small businesses are crucial to job creation and the economic viability of our nation. It is unacceptable when, in 2004, a $1.4 trillion bank like Citigroup makes only 30 SBA loans to African American firms nationwide. President Bush must support minority firms by reversing the cutbacks in SBA lending, set industry lending goals and secure transparency in all small business lending by overturning Regulation B.”

Introduction

There are an estimated 4 million minority-owned small businesses in the United States with total annual receipts of over $400 billion. Although the rate of growth for minority-owned businesses is two to three times greater than that of all US firms¹ past studies have demonstrated that, for a variety of reasons, minority-owned businesses receive less than their fair share of small business loans from financial institutions. Conclusive data on small business lending to minorities does not exist due to the Bush Administration's inattention to the "minority small business gap" and the Federal Reserve's continuous refusal to overturn "Regulation B" which prohibits financial institutions from gathering data on small business loans by race, ethnicity and gender.

This report contends that lending to minority firms would increase significantly if there was full transparency in lending to minority businesses and if the Bush administration gave minority small businesses the same level of importance that as it gives to minority homeownership. For example, financial institutions would have a greater incentive to outreach and serve minority small businesses if the Small Business Administration issued an annual report on the best lenders to minority small businesses. This can only occur, however, if the Bush Administration publicly championed closing the minority business gap and called for the end of Regulation B.

This study of SBA loans for fiscal year 2004 permits a small glimpse into the small business lending problems confronted by minority-owned businesses. SBA loans represent, with rare exceptions, only a microscopic portion of total small business lending by a financial institution. For example, Bank of America, which has the leading SBA program in terms of lending volume, made $365 million in SBA loans, which represent less than one percent of Bank of America's total small business lending in total dollars.

This SBA study, which is by race and ethnicity, demonstrates the wide variation in SBA lending to minority-owned businesses, even though these government guaranteed and subsidized small business loans were intended to primarily benefit underserved minority-owned businesses.

Tables and Grades

To encourage competition among the nation's largest SBA lenders, Greenlining has provided a series of tables ranking all of the largest SBA lenders in the nation, that is, institutions with $50 billion or more in assets and that made more than 200 or more SBA loans in fiscal year 2004. These tables detail SBA lending in three areas: loans per $5 billion in assets, total dollar amount and percentage of loans made to minorities. Each series covers lending to all minorities and separately for African Americans, Asian Americans and Latinos.

¹ See US Economic Census: <http://www.census.gov/econ/census02/>

Greenlining believes that the major financial institutions can drastically improve their SBA lending record to minorities. With this in mind, Greenlining has given a grade to each major financial institution² based on two measures: lending on a loan-to-asset ratio and percentage of loans made to minorities.³ The grades are based on the financial institution's performance relative to lending targets determined by Greenlining and its minority business association members. The Grades are also based on the institutions ranking relative to its peers. Since grades are based on these two variables a financial institution may meet the lending target but can still receive a low grade because of its ranking relative to its peers.

Large Banks Underperform Smaller Banks

It should be noted that if this study were to include the SBA lending figures for all banks, regardless of asset size, many of the major financial institutions, including Bank of America, would lose their leadership position. For example, when smaller banks are included (banks with assets below $50 billion) such as Innovative Bank ($66 million in assets), Bank of America would lose its leadership position as the top SBA lender, by volume, to African Americans. For fiscal year 2004, Innovative Bank made 1,659 SBA loans to African Americans in 2004 while Bank of America made 750.

The same pattern holds when examining lending by asset size. For example, when banks under $50 billion in assets are counted, Popular, Inc. ($36 billion in assets) would be the leader in SBA lending to all minorities per $5 billion in assets and not HSBC. While HSBC made 28 SBA loans to all minorities for every $5 billion in assets, Popular, Inc. made 115 loans per $5 billion in assets. Each major bank should thus set competitive goals to increase the number of SBA loans so that they are the leader in all areas of SBA lending, regardless of asset size.

Goals

Greenlining has asked both the Small Business Administration and the CEOs of major financial institutions to set competitive goals to substantially increase both the volume and dollar amount of SBA loans. Based on the increasing number of minority-owned firms, national goals should be set to at least 20 percent for African American-owned businesses, 20 percent for Latinos-owned businesses and 20 percent for Asian American-owned businesses. In addition, each bank should set a minimum goal of 30 SBA loans to minorities per $5 billion in assets.

² Institutions included in this study are those with over $50 billion in assets and that made over 200 SBA loans in fiscal year 2004.

³ Due the varying sizes of the financial institutions included in this study, no grade is given based on the total dollar amounts.

SUMMARY OF FINDINGS

Cumulative Grades

Using the average of the grades given in other sections of this report, Greenlining has assigned a cumulative grade to each financial institution. With an A-, HSBC has the highest overall grade while Comerica and Bank of America follow with B's. Earning F's are Wachovia, National City, BB&T and Fifth Third Bancorp.

2004 National SBA Rankings

Loan-to-Asset Ratio

Introduction

The following tables rank the major financial institutions by the number of loans made per $5 billion in assets. This loan-to-asset ratio is used to control for variations in the size of each financial institution and allows for a fairer method of comparison between institutions of varying sizes. Greenlining has also assigned a grade to each financial institution based on SBA lending targets. These lending targets are determined by examining the performance of the leader coupled with Greenlining's assessment of where SBA lending should be in each area. The grades in the last column of each table are calculated based on how well the financial institution performed relative to the lending target (as measured by the "percent of lending target") and its position relative to the rest of its competitors.

When examining SBA lending relative to the bank's size, HSBC and Comerica are the leaders. HSBC made 28.3 SBA loans to all minorities for every $5 billion in assets while Comerica made 24.6. At the other end, Wachovia and Citicorp finished at the bottom of lending to all minorities. Wachovia made only 0.57 SBA loans to all minorities for every $5 billion in assets and Citicorp made only 0.70.

2004 National SBA Rankings By Percentage of Loans Made

Introduction

The following tables rank each financial institution by the percentage of SBA loans made to a particular ethnic group group. Greenlining has set goals in percentage of lending to minorities that the major financial institutions should achieve to be considered a leader in SBA lending.

Greenlining believes that financial institutions should set a minimum goal of making at least 60% of all its SBA loans to minorities. This goal of 60% should include specific lending goals of 20% to African Americans, Asian Americans and Latinos each.

The grades in the last column of each table are calculated from how well the financial institution performed by reaching the target percentage goal and its position relative to its competitors in SBA lending.⁷
